ZUCHTSCHAU 2004 REPORT

Anke Masters

his year we welcomed President Wolfgang Ransleben and Federal Breed Warden Hans Wördemann for the last time to our event. The site in PA was beautiful and the weather was perfect (of course, we were indoors!). The Natural Den Test was split this year and the first dog was tested in NJ. It worked well and earned the award with flying colors. Then we drove out to Carrie's place to find some more woodchucks. A group of interested spectators came up to watch and it must be Murphy's Law, but we could not find a workable den all afternoon. The mood was great anyway and we made plans for a nice dinner together near the Zuchtschau site, about one hour away. It took a bit longer, maybe due to Larry's 'shortcut' but we finally made it and had a great meal at a nice restaurant.

On Saturday we evaluated 35 dogs in the ring, set up in the horse arena at Alexandra's farm. Her husband had prepared the arena perfectly and everything looked great. This year we brought in lunch so our volunteers, Phyllis and Mike, did not have to work so hard and could watch the show. Of all dogs shown five received the highest rating of Excellent and were brought back into the ring. Of those five Herr Wördemann chose the little longhair zwerg bitch of Alexandra Weber as the best dog of the day. This was especially rewarding since the bitch just had a litter of six puppies two weeks prior. She was the first dog in the ring that day and was carried in the end to avoid contracting anything that could be dangerous to her or her puppies. Second place went to Augden von Moosbach-Zuzelek owned by Sherry and Phil Ruggieri, out of John and Jolanta Jeanneney's breeding. After dinner at a local Banquet facility we had our annual membership meeting.

On Sunday it was President Ransleben's turn to judge the Companion Dog Test. Six dogs were tested and all of them passed. I think this test will make a great addition to our testing program. Our goal was to add one additional test every year and I am glad this test addresses all members, not just the hunters. The Gun Shyness Test followed.

I was very happy with the organization of the show. We had plenty of volunteers this year, which made everything run easier and more enjoyable for everybody. I would like to thank all of the volunteers, especially those who are found at every event, regardless of where or when. I start with Alexandra, who provided the beautiful site, who did all the research into hotels, restaurants, supplies and, together with her husband David, prepared the site exactly to fit our needs. Carrie did an outstanding job chairing this event, juggling the tremendous amount of paperwork, and helped with the Gunshyness Test and the Natural Den Test. Phyllis and Mike handled the lunches, coffee and sold our fundraising merchandise. Trudy has the beautiful handwriting to fill out the Formwert certificates. Teddy judged the Natural Den Test. Barbie sat at the secretary's table and handled all the paperwork. I apologize if I forgot anybody.

I would also like to mention Alexandra's and David's kids, who helped wherever they could, be it with selling merchandise, riding the bike during the companion dog test, fetching things for us ... or 'helping' with the computer work. It was refreshing and a lot of fun having the kids right in the middle.

All in all a successful event. Congratulations!

NATURAL DEN TEST

Jo Ann Frier-Murza

he natural hunting test portion of the Zuchtschau 2004 was held on Friday, September 24. Since the quarry is woodchuck, only miniatures able to go down a woodchuck hole are tested. This year, I entered Ping and Teddy Moritz entered lago. Ping was tested in NJ while lago was tested in PA. Ping is a miniature wirehaired dachshund who weighs 8 pounds and is 10 months old. He's been hunting woodchucks enthusiastically since I would allow it when he was 7 months old. He's had a great summer finding and working a good number of woodchucks under all kinds of conditions..

Anke Masters brought the Herr Wordemann and Herr Ransleben, and Teddy, David Kawami, and John and Jolanta Jeannenney joined me at my farm. Teddy and Herr Ransleben were the hunt judges. My farm is about 30 acres and it has soybean fields (aka, woodchuck food) and hedgerows next to another property with soybeans. There usually isn't any shortage of quarry. We took off from my driveway and walked the hedgerows near the driveway then started along a wide, wellvegetated hedgerow between my pastures and my neighbor's soybean field. As we walked, Ping searched the hedgerow for active dens. He quickly found a den that smelled good to him and he darted into it and started barking. It was a couple of feet from the base of a two and a half foot wide tree and, predictably, the tunnel went straight toward the tree. It was difficult to find his locator collar, although he was barking at the chuck and moving it around the area. I got some signals and followed his motion around the trunk of the tree. I finally got a really good signal from his collar as he settled into a place. Anke, John, and I started digging through roots and vines in sandy, dusty soil. When we dug through to him, he was working strongly about two feet down at a turn heading under the center of the trunk. We all decided to leave this one and go on, since the tunnel was precarious around him and the chuck was most likely safely hidden away directly under the tree.

We continued walking and letting Ping search the hedgerow under the tangled vegetation. Farther down the hedgerow, Ping blazed into a hole. I saw him go in and he started barking immediately a few feet into the tunnel.. I called the others over to watch and help. We lucked out on this one, because the vegetation had been hacked away several years ago and hadn't yet grown back thickly. There were still roots under the surface, though. There were 3 entrances that we could find. Ping barked and pushed the chuck to another entrance where his voice became very loud again. We didn't see the chuck, but the barking told us he was near. We waited to see if the chuck would bolt,, but after a while, it decided to take a turn into a side tunnel where Ping followed about 3 feet and held it there. We dug to him and it where he was working. It was clear from Ping's behavior that the chuck was close and it responded aggressively to him and to a trowel I pushed into it. We took Ping out and left Teddy's lurcher, Celtic, to watch the hole while we dug to the spot where the chuck was. If the chuck tried to come out or go by, Celtic would grab it. By the time we got through the roots and to the place the chuck had been, he was gone, having gone off to the side, somehow avoiding the lurcher. I searched around for the escape route by probing in the hole and we started digging where the dirt seemed soft. Woodchucks on the run will fill in behind themselves, making a wall that confuses the dog and slows the dog down. Ping had been released and was back in the tunnel now and digging there, too. He started to bark, then disappeared through the tunnel another way. We thought he had been put off by the "wall", but, as usual, he was absolutely right. A few seconds later, he started barking about six feet away (on the surface, perhaps 20 feet underground) where he had found the chuck. We quickly dug to the two of them. Again Ping was removed from facing the woodchuck and this time Teddy's lurcher removed it easily. The judges passed him and he now has a German hunting title.

I want to thank all the helpers that day, who made the dig more efficient by digging, holding Ping, keeping an eye on equipment, and hacking vegetation away, and Jolanta, who took some great photos of the entire event.

Den Test #2

e hunted a nice hedgerow bordering corn and alfalfa fields. There were numerous holes but neither lago nor the lurcher showed interest in any of them. A number of spectators were along, hoping to see what this woodchuck digging was all about. Regrettably we didn't get to demonstrate the sport.

Eventually the lurcher marked a two hole den at the edge of a compost heap and a hedgerow. lago went in and barked a few times and came out. Then he went to the far hole and smelled and looked in and whined. He came back to the original hole and again went in but this time he started digging. A dog must stay in and mark quarry for about five minutes to satisfy the judging requirements. I ran a trowel into the den and found it partially collapsed about three feet in. I asked the two judges if I could open the den at that point and allow the dog in again. They agreed so I dug to the tunnel. lago entered and began digging at a wall of dirt. Apparently the woodchuck had backfilled and gone on. I tried once more and again found the tunnel blocked. We could have dug the chuck and taken it, but since it was constantly backfilling, the dog didn't have the opportunity to bay it for any length of time.

We checked many other dens with no results so we tried a big mound of weed and grass covered dirt. The lurcher again had marked the den and lago went in, barked and came out. Having worked this pup all his short life (14 months) I knew from his actions at this den and the others that the woodchuck was not right in front of him. I urged him to enter again and he did but this time he went deep and began to bark. He went quiet and we didn't hear him for several minutes. I tried to locate him using the receiver box but apparently he was deeper than the eight foot collar transmitted. After another few minutes we could hear lago digging underground and if I ran my hand all the way into a lower hole I could get some clicks on the receiver box. Again the chuck had dug away from him and not allowed him to settle and bay it.

These hunts took place in September when the wood-chucks have settled into their dens and do not come out to feed much. They are fat from summer feed and are not as active. Carrie supplied plenty of den sites but the wood-chucks were just not cooperative. Iago has worked chucks for me all summer and has earned an American Working Terrier Association Working Certificate and I know what he can do in a den, but on this day the woodchucks didn't cooperate.

My thanks to Carrie for the hunting grounds and my admiration to the spectators who stayed all afternoon.

Susanne's Buster is working the pheasant scent while Herr Ransleben and David Kawami are watching.

NATC members are going to watch den work in PA.

Iago checked many dens but none of them were active.

Henry's Bear and John's Alfi are becoming familiar with the pheasant scent (pheasants are in the box), just before experimenting with a spurlaut test on pheasants.

teckels and their handlers took the BHP I test. The previous day the handlers had the chance to practice the program of the BHP I under my supervision one last time. This showed that the dogs were well prepared for the test. Their only weakness was in Heeling, which still needs improvement. This was later evidenced by the test results!

The large audience showed great interest as the test began with Heeling. It was noticeable that the majority of the teckels had problems with the leashed portion of the obstacle course. The unleashed Heel, on the other hand, was altogether good.

During the Recall the dogs mostly had good to very good performances, with one teckel performing a 'Stop'. For those dogs that only received a multiplier of '2', the handlers will still have to work on Obedience.

All the teckels passed the other parts of the BHP I were with very good results. This proves that the dogs are all well socialized and manage their surroundings in the best possible way.

Once again it must be noted that it is not the number of points but the multiplier that decides the Prize class. This way the dog with the highest point result could unfortunately only receive a Prize III, due to obtaining a multiplier of '2' in the Heel. My special respect goes to the dogs, numbers 5 and 6, which demonstrated what can still be achieved by veterans.

Altogether, besides a very nice fall day, we had a very nice result. For that I express my recognition to all the dog handlers. My thanks go also to all the helpers and the Weber family for providing the property. Anke Masters translated again in proven form, where necessary. My heartfelt thanks!

It would be desirable if the BHP would become an integral part of the testing program of the NATC.

NATC 2004 Pictures

I would like to extend many thanks to Tina Hinckley, Ed Wills and Alain Charlain for sending pictures taken at the NATC 2004 events. Some of them are included in this newsletter, in addition to my own pictures.

I was asked why pictures from the NATC 2004 are posted on my private website jola.smugmug.com and not on the NATC website. And why people are charged for these pictures? Big misunderstanding.

Pictures posted at jola.smugmug.com can be downloaded free of charge. You have to click on a picture with the right side of your mouse and save the file to your hard drive. You can do with the file whatever you want, for example, you can print pictures on your home printer. However, if you order professional prints from that site, you will be charged (nobody is giving professional prints delivered to your door for free, right?). I understand that the quality of these prints is high and a number of people have used this service (I haven't). The website jola.smugmug.com is not free. I pay for it out of my own pocket $99 a year and I post my private pictures there, pictures taken at field trials, NATC events etc. I have no limit on the number of pictures I can post there. Anybody can get a website like this from www.smugmug.com. Smugmug provides many advantages - quick upload in bulk, their proprietary layout and formatting, opportunity to order prints and so on.

On the NATC website we are limited by Megabytes we pay for; right now we are at 70% of allotted space of 50 MB. Therefore, when I post pictures there I have to reduce their size so they don't take much room. Reducing pictures' size helps to reduce time to bring them up on the screen, especially for people who do not have a cable modem. But reducing pictures' size takes time and it reduces their quality too. You are not going to get a good quality print done on your own ink jet printer when the picture is posted at the resolution of 72 dpi.

If anybody would like to help with the NATC website, keep it fresh and frequently updated, please let me know. I certainly could use help. Producing 6 newsletters (plus extra issues like this one) a year, posting and printing them, is a big job.
